Don Dunstan

Good evening.

One of the most vital services which can be given our community is that of libraries - if a community is to be informed & able to make adequate judgments it ought to be well-read.

In South Australia we for years had no free public libraries system - the only free public library was that at North Terrace. For the rest, there were the Institute or subscription libraries, largely stocked with fiction & magazines, & operating, generally rather heavily, on the subscription system. The institutes did not have the advantage of trained library staff (and being bearing adequate by qualified as a librarian requires long & rigorous training,) nor were they to any marked extent supported out of the rates. At annual meeting after annual meeting they bewailed their poverty & steadily worsening financial position.

Other States had given a lead in the establishment of free public libraries, supported jointly out of local rates & government subsidy.

Liberal members pressed for the same thing to be done here - and in 1954 in the debate on the budget I said this: - (Hansard 1307)

In 1955 the Libraries Board after careful investigation recommended a scheme for free public libraries in S. A. which provided the central initiative by the Board could set up regional libraries in which they would seek the co-operation of local governing bodies of the Government. It was based on the experience of other States, & would have allowed for public libraries to be set up with reasonable expedition. The Bill to put into effect the Board's recommendations, which would have received the united & enthusiastic support of the Labor party, was taken up by the Premier, & never introduced. Instead he introduced a Bill which provided that after local government had set up free libraries they could come to the Government & the Govt. might grant them up to a £1/- for £1 subsidy. That bill was a useless piece of window dressing. Under it not one public library was set up. In fact some Govt. members during the debate made it clear that they thought this was an undesirable service - The present Min. for Works said he did not agree with having entirely free libraries and went on to say this - taken in. Harwood 1955 p. 1686.

A Subsequent Librarian conference in Adelaide was very critical of the situation in South Australia, & the Min. of Education endeavored to still their dismay by saying that under the Act there was power to subsidize all library costs. Of course there was not that power, so I asked him about it in the House. The Premier replied and this is what took place in the House - Harwood 57. p. 466.

Well you know when the Estimaire came along I looked in vain for the answer the Premier spoke of. It was not them. While I was questioning it, about the Premier was about from the House. It was clear that his earlier reply to me was thought up on the spur of the moment, & as soon forgotten.

However, the Board, to give it credit, did eventually make the amendments to the Libraries Subsidies Act which would allow it to operate to some extent - they provided in the amendment that they could make establishment grants. As a result, year after the other State, we are making some fattering steps to providing for public libraries. But because the Board scheme of central initiative is still not operating, the progress is hopelessly slow. Here is the point - judge it for yourself.
